The Blue's Defence Excels, While Princeton's Attack Is Stronger—Point Rec-ords of Teams—Yale in Doubt About

Point games brought into comparison points in the play of the two big rivals of next Satsolution solely on the showing of the Blue and the Orange and Black against the Cadets Yale excels Princeton in defence and Princeton has somewhat the better of Yale in offence. West Point made less ground against the Elis than against the Tigers, while, on the other hand, the Jerseymen made more ground against the Army than did the New Haven men. Princeton was infinitely better than Yale in catching punts, but not so good in running them back, once Yale got hands on the ball.

The Princeton backs caught punts with rare skill. Pearson once going up in the air and catching the ball at his shoulder, a difficult feat, but not a style of catching to be encouraged. Yale's interference in protecting a man running back a punt was better than Princeton's, the blocking being more effective, but the Tigers displayed batter interference from line-ups. It was hard, quick and compact. The Princeton backs were more aggressive than Yale's on the offence, individually that is, but did not work together as well as Yale's or keep their feet as well. The Yale backs kept going better than Princeton's, though they did not get under headway as quickly and got a few extra inches that Princeton missed. Nevertheless, the Princeton backfield is as good as the best, and, with the line doing its share and more concerted effort, will make trouble.

good as the best, and, with the line doing share and more concerted effort, will make trouble.

Yale's line was stronger than Princeton's, which, however, included three substitutes. The centre was better, guards better, tackles better and ends about equal. Princeton's right wing had a green man at guard, which doubtless made matters more troublesome for DeWitt at right tackle. Regarding DeWitt's purting he was instructed, it is said, to kick short so that the ends could nip Daly and shut off any runs in a broken field. Unless the ends were slow, which they were not, they could have covered kicks twice the distance. All in all, taking the West Point games as a comparison next Saturday's contest is a baffling one to pre-judge, and much depends on this week's progress. There is an interesting record in connection with the Yale-West Point and Princeton-West Point games which, for those who are want to figure on history repeating itself, makes the situation all the more puzzling. In 1897 West Point tied Yale, 6 to 6 and Yale beat Princeton, 5 to 5, and Princeton beat Yale that year. This year Yale and West Point played a 5 to 8 game while the Princeton-West Point score was 6 to 6.

In rain and mud the opening game for the championship of the New York Interscholastic Athletic Association was played at Berkeley Oval yesterday afternoon. The contesting teams were from Columbia Grammar and Barnard Schools, the former winning by a score of 2s to 0. The defeat puts Barnard out of the race for championship honors. The Barnard boys were outclassed in weight and team work and at right end and right tackle they were lamentably weak Columbia Grammar took advantage of these weak points throughout. The Barnard interference was slow in forming, while the line gave way like paper every time an opposing back was sent against it. Columbia Grammar played a fast snappy game, especially, Paisley, who made three of the touchdowns after long runs. L. Dowdney punted in clever style. The teams lined up as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 11.—Football practice at the University of Pennsylvania to-day was the shortest of the year. The men did not report until late in the afternoon and it was nearly 5 o'clock when coach Woodruft appeared on Franklin Field. Gathering the men about him in one corner of the field he spont half an hour criticising the mistakes made by the Quakers in the Harvard game and told them how they might have made at least one more touchdown. After the talk the men had some practice in punting and catching the bail. Then the scrub and Varsity were lined up for a fifteen-miniate scrimmage. Dale, Donalson, Davidson, Thomas, Reynolds and Teas took a rest, Pennsylvania will make no special preparation for the Indians, but will bend every effort to stave off defeat by West Point and Cornell.

NEW HAYEN, Nov. 11.—Yale students had a mass meeting to-night to show their loyalty for the 'Varsity football squad. About 1,000 attended. Walter Camp was booked for a speech, but he was out of town. Speeches were made by Cross and Brown, [46], both declaring that Yale had the best team she has had in years on the gridiron. It was stated here to-night that the Harvard football management had writtento Yale concerning the eligibility of Glass, the Yale right good of the transity of the property of the transity worth mentioning. All the men who played at Philadelphia last Saturday of this subject. Head Conch Stillman stated that Harvard had not formally protested against Glass.

CAMBRIDGE, Nov. 11.—Harvard's eleven came through the Pennsylvania game without an injury worth mentioning. All the men who played at Philadelphia last Saturday with football togs except Putnam, who has his shin a bit bruised, but it is not at all serious. The other men do not show a single sign of Philadelphia last Saturday which catching punts played an important part. After a short snappy signal practice the Varsity took a short run, and then returned to the lock

To THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: In the course of an article on football matters in one of your contemporaries, in referring to the eligibility of Glass, the Yale football player, it was stated that "there is no rancor or ill-feeling at Harvard" in regard to this

From personal knowledge of the sentiment of Harvard undergraduates I know this to be a mistake. Harvard undergraduates can see in Yale's evident determination to play Glass only a violation of good faith, for under Yale's own rule he is clearly ineligible. For this reason there is ill-feeling here at Harvard about the Glass case, and a bitterness continually increasing as the day of the game draws near and Yale, by not barring him, lets us believe that she intends to play him.

It is best for all concerned that Yale men should realize that the playing of Glass will cause a bitterness at Harvard which will surely bring about unfortunate results.

HARVARD UNDERGRADUATE.

CAMBRIDGE, Nov. 10.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN-Sir: The case of Glass of Yale, insofar as he is sup-ported as eligible by Yale University, is a conspicuous but unquestionable instance of a violation of the rules for eligibility which nings track this afternoon, but it failed to come up to expectations in many ways. The benches which were put in shortly after 12 o'clock had recently been painted a bright red and had not time to dry out. Many handsome gowns of the women suffered in consequence. The new betting ring is under the grand stand and it is a decided improvement over the old one, while the old clubhouse has been torn down and a better one erected. Instead of a big open space in the paddock, as during the spring meeting, stalls have been put all over the place. It will require a week or more to complete the improvements. The attendance was disappointing, although the weather conditions were perfect. In the ring forty-two layers drew positions, twenty-eight of whom were members of the Metropolitan Turf Association. The sport was good, considering that the track looked as if nothing had been done with it since last spring.

tion. The sport was good, considering that the track looked as if nothing had been done with it since last spring.

The meeting opened poorly for the bettors, as Fonsoluca and Boisterous were the only successful favorites. The Grand Stand Handicap was the leading event of the day and eight ran. Knight of Rhodes, The Amazon and Carbuncle were added to the race. When the betting opened Knight of Rhodes and Unmasked were equal favorites, but the former received the strongest support and went to the post favorite, while The Amazon was well backed. The Amazon took the lead in the last cuarter and won by three lengths from Unmasked. Wonderly, who rode the latter, lodged a protest of foul, but it was not allowed. Knight of Rhodes was interfered with coming into the stretch.

The first event had Sister Juliet as the favorite, but the second choice, The Puritan, led all the way and won easily. Fifteen maiden two-year-olds ran in the second race, with Happy, the second choice, an easy winner, while the favorite, Longlove, was not in the money. Boisterous, favorite, led all the way in the steeplechase and won easily from the second choice, Baby Bill, with Cheesemite, the other starter, beaten off a quarter of a mile. Fonsoluca carried J. Grant Lyman's colors in the fifth race as he bought him back from Tommy Griffin, who purchased him from a selling race at Aqueduct. Fonsoluca, who was favorite, won easily from Hans Wagner. The biggest upset came in the last race, which Cherished, a 40 to 1 chance, won easily from Death, who had been backed from 20 to 1 to 6 to 1. Curtsey, the favorite, was third. Summary:

GLEN COVE, Nov. 11.—Ex-Champion Findlay S. Douglas has again proved the assertion that "misfortunes do not come singly" for in the final round for the championship of the Nassau Country Club to-day he was again defeated finishing 2 down and 1 to go in a close match with Howard F. Whitney. His defeat in the team match of Saturday at Dyker Meadow and the defeat to-day following so closely, pleases many golfers as being evidence, not that Douglas is off his game, but that a number of home golfers are now in the same class as the popular Scottish-taught player. The match was most exciting and where the medal play figures are not as low as usual, it was due to a heavy gale which swept through the course. In the play Whitney took the first hole, a heavy gale which swept through the course. In the play Whitney took the first hole, bouglas the second, Whitney the third, while they were both down in 5 on the fourth Whitney took the fifth while the sixth and seventh were halved and Douglas taking the eighth and ninth evened the match at the turn. The next four holes were halved and the fourteenth went to Whitney, whose wonderful recovery after a badly hooked drive surprised the gallery. The fifteenth was halved, Whitney, who had the honor, hooked his drive badly, the wind carrying the ball against the station roof, caroming across the railroad track to the opposite bank, his lie being fully as far from the green as the tee and in the high grass. This looked on the edge of the green and his admirers were duly elated. Whitney, who had the honor, hooked his drive badly, the wind carrying the ball against the station roof, caroming across the railroad track to the opposite bank, his lie being fully as far from the green as the tee and in the high grass. This looked on the edge of the green and his admirers were duly elated. Whitney, however, held his nerve and pitched his second shot but ten feet from the hole. Douglas running his like within three feet of the cup.

Whitney won the find by leaving Beecher's down.
